SWITZERLAND

Dear Colleagues

It gives me great pleasure to invite you to Bern for the EHHF annual meeting of 2016. The EHHF is a unique opportunity during the year for us to gather to debate and exchange views on the current situation, on politics, and on questions of cultural heritage within the European Union and the EFTA Countries, and to reinforce our personal links. The great added-value of our meetings lies in the informality of our debates, allowing free and open discussion, in addition there is the particular spirit that comes from the fact that we are among ourselves and our guests. Our discussions are thus subject to the Chatham House Rule.

For some years now, cultural heritage has seemed to benefit from increased political attention at European level, and even globally. Multilateral policy highlights its importance to society and the intrinsic link that exists between sustainable development, respect for human rights, and heritage protection. Thus the European Commission declared in 2014: "Old approaches sought to protect heritage by isolating it from daily life. New approaches focus on making it fully part of the local community. Sites are given a second life and meaning that speak to contemporary needs and concerns." Is this true or false? Are "classic" approaches to heritage management really outdated? And what does this imply for the work we do? What exactly are the new approaches? What opportunities, chances, but also risks does it present? Or to put it differently: is there a gap between the rhetoric of heritage policy and the actual challenges faced in the field, and if so, how should we react?

Concrete topics will be debated in Bern from this angle: the Cultural Heritage Strategy for the 21st Century is currently under development within the framework of the Council of Europe – what will be its future impact and how will it be implemented? The European Cultural Heritage Year, proposed for 2018 under the title "Sharing Heritage", could present an opportunity to promote heritage and its protection. At the same time, the intentional destruction of cultural heritage has become a reality in the conflicts within the Arab world: how do we engage with each other to help out in this crisis?

Good work requires a good setting: the meeting will take place in the Bellevue Palace Hotel, a traditional place for discussions and debates, situated at the centre of federal Bern. Visits are planned in Bern on the afternoon of your arrival; on Thursday evening we will be on the banks of Lake Thun, where I hope that the weather will be kind to us and that the Alpine panorama will charm you. Finally, on Friday afternoon, for those who wish, we will visit Lavaux Vineyard Terraces, a world heritage site since 2007 and the exemplar for numerous questions related to heritage management.

Welcome to Bern and looking forward to seeing you all in Switzerland!

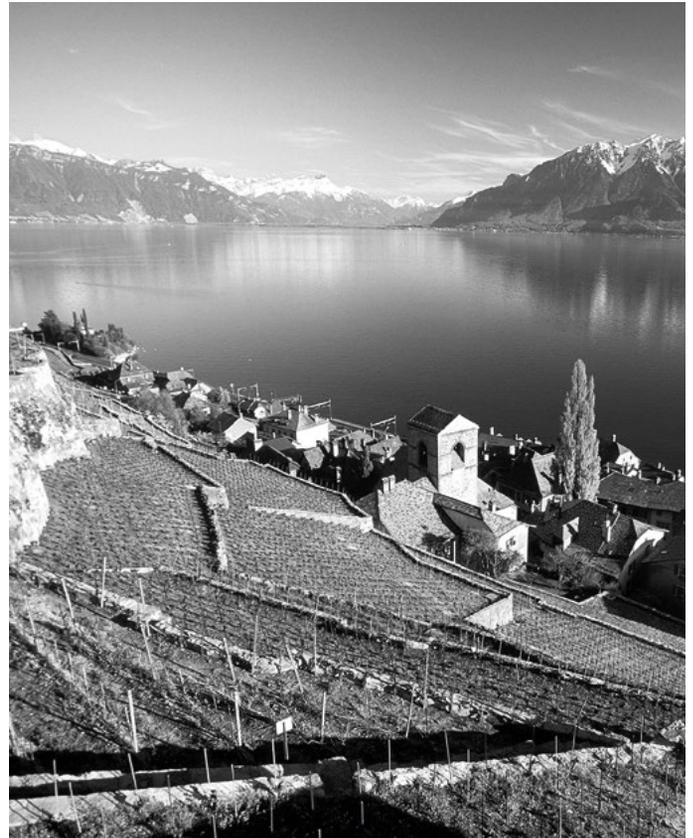

Dr. Oliver Martin

Head of Section Cultural Heritage,
Swiss Federal Office of Culture

The Lavaux vineyard landscape is a thriving cultural landscape that demonstrates in a highly visible way its evolution and development over almost a millennia, through the well preserved landscape and buildings, and also the continuation and adaptation of longstanding cultural traditions, specific to its locality. It also illustrates very graphically the story of patronage, control and protection of this highly valued wine growing area, all of which contributed substantially to the development of Lausanne and its Region and played a significant role in the history of the geo-cultural region; and, has prompted, in response to its vulnerability next to fast-growing settlements, exceptional popular protection.
