

The impact of modern agriculture on the subterranean archaeological heritage in Germany

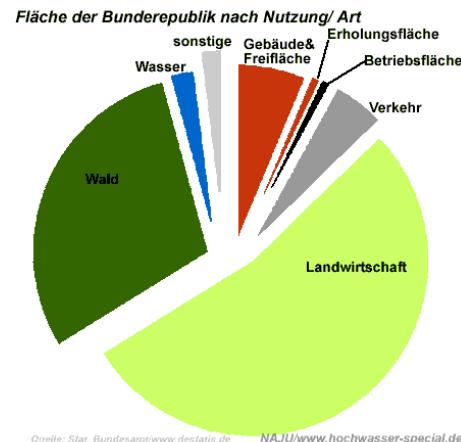

Jürgen Kunow, Bonn

New challenges to the co-operation between „archaeology and farming“

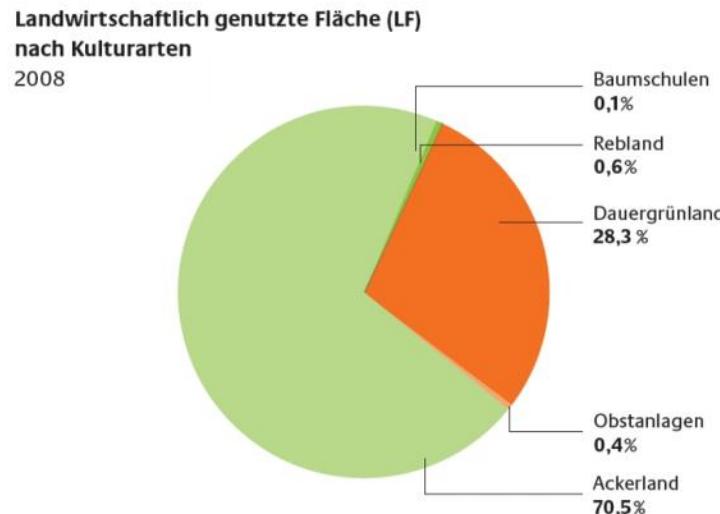

- future Common Agricultural Policy of the European Union (CAP) from 2013
- climate change (especially the effects of heavy rain, storms, dryness)
- worldwide increasing demands for renewable raw materials and foodstuffs land use, overall

land use, farming

Quelle: Statistisches Bundesamt, BMELV, 425

arable land in Germany

Development of ploughing

ca. 1950

ca. 1990

2011

Erosion as a result of intensive farming and climate change

Traces of deep-ploughing as disturbances in archaeological features

Effects of nitrogen fertilisation on metal finds

Celtic coins from the Rhineland-Palatinate and Northrhine-Westphalia

a

old finds

left: Pommern, Kr. Cochem-Zell
right: Nörvenich, Kr. Düren

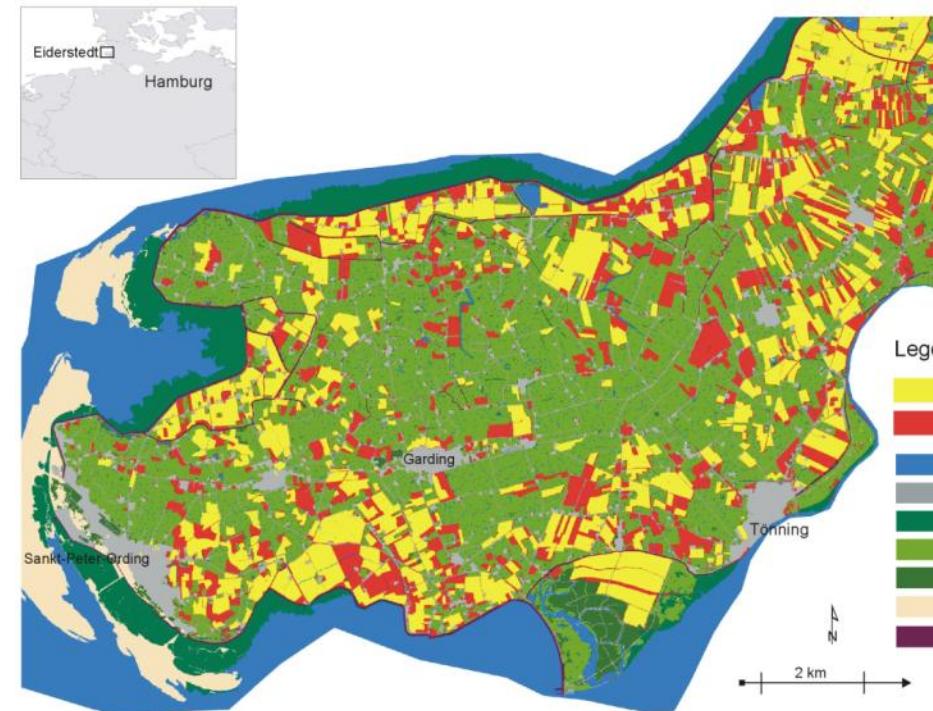

b

new finds

left: Pommern, Kr. Cochem-Zell
right: Nörvenich, Kr. Düren

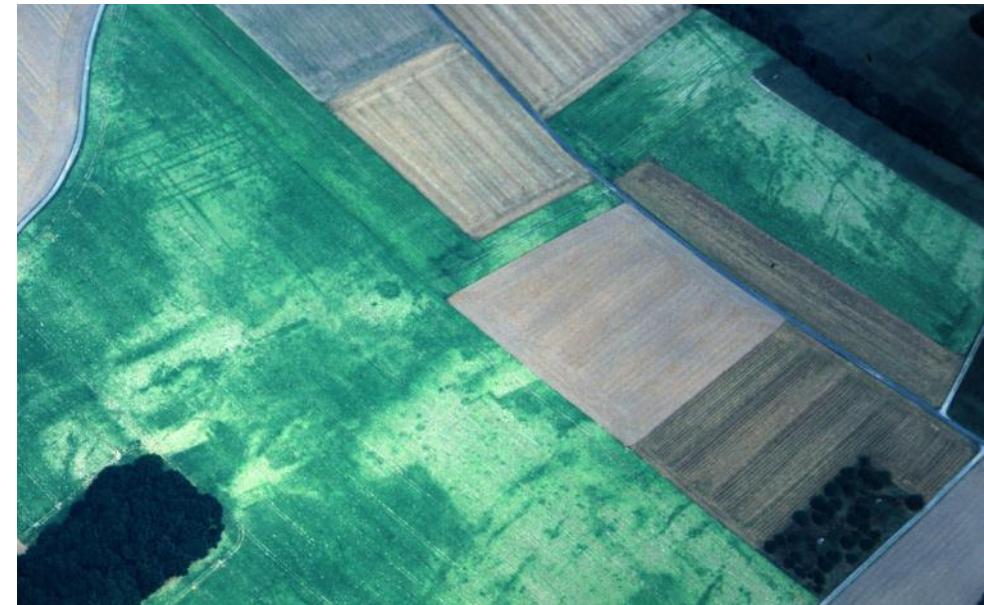

The transition from grassland and monoculture: the impoverishment of the landscape

Aim: The removal from agricultural use - the nature-orientated visualisation of archaeological monuments

Römerpark Ruffenhofen, Bavaria

Two legionary fortress Vetera Castra, Xanten, NRW

New methods of cultivation („precision farming“) and financial compensation owing to crop-reduction

GIS-supported cultivation

Heritage areas and precision farming